

Implimenting such a thing would require major work for most ISP's, which would hand down the extra cost to us subscribers. I don't want to pay more money for my internet connection because somebody might want to use it to incriminate me some day.

Homeland security my butt. We value our privacy, and we're not willing to give it up because of some thug you want to capture e-mail from.